The Daily Bulletin.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 16, 1892.

Then he pointed a gun through a hole in the fence and snapped the lock at me until bed-time. That night I took a stick from under his pillow, with over two hundred nooses in it. I guess they represent the number of times he killed me through the fence."

"When did he go?"

"Thursday morning. He told some boys that he was going all the way by water, because it saved walking, and I think he must have got a row-boat somewhere. He's got a notion that the Indians are somewhere in the vicinity of Albany, and I reckon I'll find him there. On he's on the trail, because he went to the grocer and scared him out of a string of onions; told him to put 'em up, thou slave of the law, or by yon star the Avenger of the Monongahela will mount his trusty steed, and following thee to thy mountain fastness, will slay thee while thy faithless wife crawls on her knees, and thy beggared brats beseech thee for bread!" The grocer gave him the onions and I paid him yesterday. I'm going to police-headquarters to see if anybody has seen a loose avenger around, advertising for blood! So long."
